RICHMOND -- The city of Richmond will hold a public hearing Tuesday to discuss plans to build new 193 units of housing in the Marina Bay neighborhood, part of a spate of new development in the area.

The meeting comes during a chronic shortage of housing in the Bay Area, with cities routinely building fewer than half the units needed to meet demand, according to the Association of Bay Area Governments.

The Baywalk project would be located at 830 Marina Way South, and consist of 98 live-work units live-work units and 95 three-bedroom, three-story townhomes. All of the units would be market-rate.

The hearing will take place at 6:30 p.m. October 6 at the Richmond City Council chamber, 440 Civic Center Plaza.
